Kadena's Services takes five AF awards

By Capt. CK Keegan
18th Wing Public Affairs

The 18th Services Squadron took home more Air Force awards than any other base, with five of its programs taking top honors, and Tech. Sgt. Harvey Gilchrist winning Services top NCO of the year.

The program awards went to the Enlisted Club, Fitness and Sports program, the Human Resources office, Marketing and Youth Programs.

"I am so proud to be associated with such a talented group of people," said Col. Ross Roley, 18 Services commander. "Since my arrival on Kadena, I've been overwhelmed with Kadena Services' creativity, ingenuity and dedication."

Kash assumes command of 18th Medical Group

By Master Sgt. Adam Johnston
18th Wing Public Affairs

Col. Kelley Kash assumed command of the 18th Medical Group from Col. Mark Presson in a change of command ceremony July 16 at 4:18 p.m. at the Kadena Officers' Club.

Colonel Kash is now in charge of a medical group that includes four squadrons and nearly 500 people that provide medical care to base and joint service personnel at Kadena.

"It is indeed an honor and blessing --literally a dream come true-- to be able to serve as commander of the medical group in support of such a large, diverse and critical operational wing," the colonel said during the ceremony attended by more than 200 people. "It would be an understatement to say that I am ecstatic to be serving on your team," he said.

The 18th Medical Group is the Air Force's largest freestanding ambulatory clinic in terms of assigned personnel and is the largest outpatient clinic in Pacific Air Forces with 15 primary care teams and 96,500 annual visits.

"Our mission is the wing's mission...to fly and win," the colonel said. "We medics support the Airmen and

Freaney takes command of 18th Operations Group

By Master Sgt. Adam Johnston
18th Wing Public Affairs

A former member of the 44th Fighter Squadron has returned to Kadena after 12 years, to lead one of the largest operations groups in the Air Force.

Col. David Freaney assumed leadership of the 18th Operations Group from Col. Joseph Ford in a change of command ceremony July 16 at 8:18 a.m. in Building 3660.

"We are going to do three things during my tour as commander," Colonel Freaney said. "The first is taking care of the people, the second is to have fun, and the third is to get the mission done. It is my opinion that if we consistently do the first two points, the third one will take care of itself."

The son of a former Airman, Colonel Freaney's first "tour" in Okinawa was at the age of six weeks when his father was stationed at Naha Air Base in 1958. Later, as a captain, he was assigned to the 44th Fighter Squadron at Kadena from 1989 until 1992 where he worked three different jobs: assistant chief of wing weapons and tactics, squadron weapons and tactics officer and D flight commander.

The very best of our Nation stands just right next to you

By Lt. Col. Keith Swensen
961st Airborne Air Control Squadron

Every week I read the commentaries about leadership written by my fellow commanders.

I've learned so much from these talented leaders of Team Kadena. I often stand in awe of their insight, wisdom and leadership.

At the same time, it's my daily interaction with the junior officers, NCO's, Airmen, and family members that truly inspires me.

U.S. Marine Corps Gen. Charles Krulak, in an address back in 2000, stated "The military has a tradition of producing great leaders that possess the highest ethical standards and integrity. It produces men and women of character...character that allows them to deal ethically with the challenges of today and to make conscious decisions about how they will approach tomorrow."

The older I get, the more common it is to hear the lamenting of how today's society lacks the "old" moral fiber and standards of character.

How today's young people don't do this...or don't care about that.

And without any introspective critical thought, I found myself buying into that line of thinking.

But this past year and a half as a commander, I've found so many examples to prove that wrong.

Just as we complain about the media focusing on all the negative, I think we are more cognizant of the segments of society that lack strong moral character.

And yet every day, the very best this nation has to offer...is right there before us.

It's your troops, your families, your teachers, and even your children.

Just stop and think about it for a moment...our military ideals, our military character; they are uniquely distinctive qualities within American society.

Not just for those in uniform, but also for our families.

We're more involved in the neighborhood, community, and schools, our children tend to be better behaved and more respectful...we exude leadership at all levels.

The military today is so much more than the military of the past.

A better educated, all volunteer force, desegregated by gender and race, a vast civilian work force and most importantly- involved families.

It is YOU and your families, and those around us that make America great.

In his 1999 address to The Citadel, then Texas Governor George W. Bush stated, "Our world, shaped by American courage, power and wisdom, now echoes with American ideals. We won the victory of the Cold War, not for a nation, but for a vision. A vision of freedom and individual integrity..."

We expect our senior officers and NCO's to lead with a vision and individual character and integrity.

But I am always inspired by the service, character and integrity of our front line troops and their families:

- The integrity of an Airman on the line, who cancels a sortie for a lost tool...even though he knows the punishment for lack of tool control will be severe.

- The compassion of a flight of Airmen who sit in a hospital recovery room 24/7 over the long Christmas holidays just to be there for a young mother whose infant has had heart surgery.

- The Flight Commander who refuses a day off or to leave the AOR until all her people have been taken care of first.

- The spouse who volunteers to organize meals on wheels for squadron members who are stricken by hospital emergencies; even while her own husband is deployed.

- The Chapel Youth Group members who were brave enough to give up part of their own summer vacation to reach out to the local community on a Christian mission trip.

- The Airman who found $1800.00 and went out of his way to track down the owner...and refused a reward. (Ok, he did accept some homemade cookies and a friend for life.)

And these are only the ones you find out about - and they're embarrassed when they are mentioned.

I am in awe of the leadership I see at all levels.

I can't really answer whether or not society is worse now than in the past.

But from what I see in our community, General Krulak was right, we do have a rich tradition of producing great leaders...leaders at all levels.

Brig. Gen.
Jan-Marc Jouas
18th Wing commander

The 18th Wing is very interested in ideas that can make Kadena an even better place to live, work and play. If you have a concern that you have been unable to resolve through normal chains of command, then we'll look into

it. Although not required, it's better to give commanders, first sergeants or the agencies with which you have the concern the opportunity to correct the situation first. When that fails, send us an e-mail. Include your name and telephone number so someone can get back to you, and a brief summary of your concern.

Sidewalk ramps

There are two issues I have with the lack of sidewalk ramps at Kadena:

1. Sidewalk ramps encourage walking rather than driving which will help conserve gas and less pollution.

2. While I realize there are probably a limited number of individuals on base who use wheelchairs, this would be a terrible place to try to get around in a wheelchair without assistance. Other than ramps around the schools and a few scattered places, I'd say things are poor.

In any case, there are limited ramps on sidewalks. I am trying to bring an existing problem to the attention of those in charge. Civil engineering is not going to change construction plans because a spouse is complaining she is having trouble getting around base on the sidewalks with her stroller- and they shouldn't. But I don't know how to make change happen other than by writing this e-mail.

Thank you for your question concerning ramps for sidewalks and curbs. Our current policy regarding ramps is to install them when required by the Americans with Disabilities Act guidelines or when we make major changes to our sidewalk systems. We understand that ramps are a quality of life issue and our current Quality of Life program focused on upgrading facilities such as the base theater, library, and Riser Fitness Center. I've asked our civil engineers to look at installing ramps on a section of the base's sidewalks to provide an adequate course for strollers. This will have to be prioritized among other projects intended to enhance our mission needs and quality of life. However, your letter has brought this need to my attention, and I will take it into consideration when reviewing upcoming projects.

Now, Colonel Freaney commands one of the largest operations groups in the Air Force that includes eight squadrons, one air control flight and approximately 750 people.

The 18th Operations Group conducts the 18th Wing's flying mission on and off Okinawa with an airframe arsenal of nearly 50 fighter jets, about 15 refuelers, approximately two airborne warning and control aircraft as well as some 10 rescue helicopters that are valued at more than $4 billion.

Colonel Freaney, a command pilot who has more than 3,000 flying hours in models A through D of the F-15, arrives to Kadena after a year-long Headquarters Air Combat Command assignment at Langley AFB, Va., where he served as chief of the air dominance capabilities team in the directorate of requirements.

Three times throughout his career, Colonel Freaney has reaped honors as a distinguished graduate at:

-- Officers Training School at Lackland AFB, Texas.

-- Undergraduate pilot training at the 14th Flying Training Wing at Columbus AFB, Miss.

-- College of Naval Command and Staff at the U.S. Naval War College at Newport, R.I.

After earning his pilot's wings, Colonel Freaney attended lead-in fighter training at Holloman AFB, New Mexico and F-15 basic training at Luke AFB, Arizona.

The colonel graduated from the University of South Carolina in 1980 with a Bachelor of Science Degree in Mathematics. He was commissioned as a second lieutenant in August 1981 after attending the U.S. Air Force Officer's Training School at Lackland.

Colonel Freaney has also earned three Masters degrees, a Master of Science in Aeronautical Science from Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University, a Master of Arts in National Security and Strategic Studies from the Naval War College and a Master of Science in National Resource Strategy from the Industrial College of the Armed Forces.

Airmen, soldiers and kids release 69 Loggerhead Sea Turtles at Torii Beach

By Army Spc. Nicole L. Kojetin
10th Area Support Group

TORII STATION, Japan -- Around 200 military community members watched their children, brimming with excitement, wade waist deep to gently release 69 tiny Loggerhead Sea Turtles at Torii Beach Tuesday.

"It was so cool to know that we are helping something survive in the wild," said Amber Snyder, 10, daughter of Air Force Tech Sgt. Wayne Snyder of 44th Aircraft Maintenance Unit. "So, now the baby turtles can go somewhere else and grow and maybe they'll come back to Torii some day."

On Mother's Day earlier this year, an Army military policeman spotted strange tracks on the sand and followed them to discover a Loggerhead Sea Turtle laying eggs May 9.

Soon after receiving the call, the beach staff was on the scene huddled around the mother counting the eggs as she laid them.

But the staff decided it wasn't safe to leave the eggs there and placed them into large rubber containers packed with sand in the scuba locker's "back yard," or the fenced in area that contains water sports equipment.

"We moved the eggs off of the beach in order to protect them," said Tsutomu Kochi, Torii Beach recreation specialist. "We wanted to make sure that the birds and elements could not get to them."

Egg-laying sea turtles are becoming a regular occurrence at Torii Beach. Two years ago, four sea turtles chose the beach for a nesting site.

The baby turtles, which started hatching at 8 p.m. July 18, were originally expected to hatch on June 28. Being in the shade of the equipment area kept the eggs cool and that slowed the process down, said Kochi.

As the turtles hatched, the beach staff took them out of the bins and placed them into an aquarium and fed them fish food pellets until they were joined by their brothers and sisters. Out of the 82 eggs, 72 healthy turtles emerged. Three of these turtle will be kept until they are large enough to be marked with a Japanese tracking tag.

Their mother migrated from Baha, Calif., said Kochi. So, the hatchlings may head toward California, but the first hurdle was to get past the coral reef.

According to the Sea Turtles Association of Japan's Web site at www.umigame.org, the baby sea turtles return to the sea at night. That is when they are the most energized and part of the reason the beach staff chose to release them. They also calculated when the tide was coming in.

"We released them at 7 p.m. because they still had a few hours before high tide," said Kochi. "They will only be safe once they get past the reef, otherwise they could get eaten by the birds."

The event lasted only a few minutes. Beach officials wanted to limit the amount of time the hatchlings were handled and get them into the water quickly. "The more they are being handled the more they wear themselves out," said Kochi. "That is also why we released them into the water instead of on the beach. We want them to have a great chance at survival."

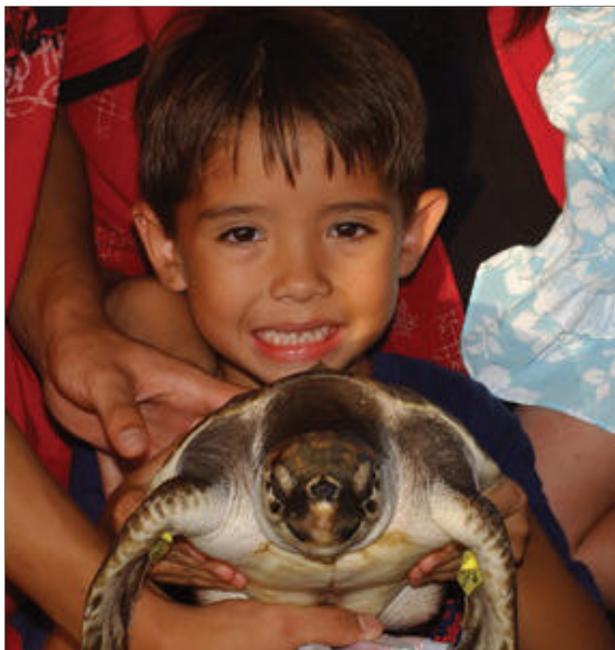

Army Col. Anthony Williams, 10th Area Support Group commander, showed the children the importance of the event by releasing a turtle that was tagged. The tagging of the turtles will help researchers better understand their behavior and allow them to find a better means of protection, officials said.

These turtles have many challenges to face as they age. According to the Japanese turtle association, a combination of seawalls, fishing nets and harvesting of turtles in developing countries, has resulted in a drastic reduction of world's sea turtle population being drastically reduced.

Because of those rivets, workers must sand many areas of the fuselage by hand.

Workers with the 18th Equipment Maintenance Squadron have been working for the last week to roll out a helicopter here with a totally new look.

The corrosion control element of 18th EMS has been sanding off the woodland green camouflage paint scheme and repainting an HH-60 helicopter in gunship grey to match new requirements of special operations squadrons. "This is the first one we've painted with this scheme," said Tech. Sgt. Ed Kauten, corrosion control element chief with the 18th Equipment Maintenance Squadron. "They want us to paint two more next quarter," he said.

"The helicopter is a lot harder to sand compared to the F-15 because it has a lot of protruding fasteners in the tail section and on top of the aircraft," Sergeant Kauten said. "Because of this we have to sand a lot of it by hand. While we can use power sanders on the flat parts, we can't on a large majority of the aircraft because we could potentially sand the rivets right off." An HH-60 has about 7,500 rivets on its frame.

Sergeant Kauten estimated that the cost of repainting this helicopter is about $11,000. An F-15 averages about $14,000. He said the corrosion control element also washes about 15 aircraft a week, repaints various parts of aircraft like landing gear, pylons and bolts and also does three F-15 touchup paint jobs a day. Sergeant Kauten said his work force now totally repaints about 24 to 30 aircraft a year. That number is up from previous years' figures -- an average of about 15 aircraft per year -- because a special paint booth his workers use is now back up to speed.

But while the shop is cranking out more aircraft, the work Sergeant Kauten's staff does is less than glamorous as all workers in the paint booth must don respirators, coveralls and gloves to ensure no unnecessary part of their body is exposed when sanding and painting. The safety requirements that go along with the job leave workers sweating like they're wearing a parka to the beach. "The hardest part is wearing your respirator in the hot weather," said Airman 1st Class Steven Green, one of several workers who sweated away on the HH-60 project. "But when all the work is done, I feel like I've accomplished a lot and that I've helped the Air Force," Airman Green said.

"It's rare for us to see an HH-60 here," said Airman 1st Class David Osterberg, a working supervisor on the helicopter project. "Some people who work in corrosion control will never get an opportunity to paint one," he said. Prepping for the painting and masking the aircraft seem to take the most time on a project like this he said. But, he said "It'll feel really good when the helicopter rolls out looking brand new."

On Thursday, workers were applying stencils to the helicopter and today they are scheduled to roll out the chopper as a bird with a totally different color.

Some 280 Catholic and Protestant children worked on developing their character and their love of Jesus -- this year's theme -- last week during Vacation Bible School at Kadena's Chapel One.

Organizers acknowledged this year's annual Bible school was smaller than last year -- not because of a lack of interest -- but because of a lack of space.

"Normally we hold Vacation Bible School in one of the (base) schools but renovations forced the organizers to use a smaller facility this year," said Chaplain (Lt. Col.) James Cutter, 18th Wing chaplain. "Unfortunately this year we did have to turn some people away because we had to limit enrollment to 150 people per faith group because of the limited space at Chapel One," he said. "We normally have between 450 and 500 people attend but we could not support that this year and we did the best we could with the space we had."

The program, which ran from July 13 until July 16, in Chapel One had some 80 volunteers teaching Protestant children from 9 a.m. to noon and Catholic children from 6 to 8 p.m. On July 16, parents and guests were invited to attend a production put on by this year's Vacation Bible School participants. Among the curriculum during the week were classes on character building with lessons that helped teach how to fight temptation, stand firm when others give in and lessons in hope and courage.

"One of the things I like about Vacation Bible School is that it gives us an opportunity to have young folks explore their faith in a fun environment," Chaplain Cutter said.

Plans for next year's event include combining both Protestant and Catholic children into one group in a larger facility to help intermix the two groups so organizers can emphasize what the two groups have in common. "We've done it before, it's not difficult to pull off if we can get one of the schools to help and it's been very well received," Chaplain Cutter said. This year's Vacation Bible School was sponsored by the Chapel community and the American Womens' Welfare Association.

Cubs show the world they are sore losers

Round 1: Albert Pujols ended the Chicago Cubs' post-season hopes Wednesday with three mighty swings.

The Cardinals slugger blasted three homeruns against the team that many picked as the eventual World Series champions. Too bad for Cubs fans. Carlos Zambrano, who pitched the opening game of the two-game series with St. Louis, hit Cardinals centerfielder Jim Edmonds in the opening inning Tuesday.

Edmonds answered with a homerun in the fourth and rounded the bases with Zambrano yelling at him as he touched home plate. Not to be shown up, Zambrano drilled Edmonds again in the seventh. Edmonds would not be goaded into a fight. However, Zambrano knew better than to throw at Pujols or Scott Rolen, both of whom would have been a bit more cranky than Edmonds was. Pujols answered the next day however, with three home-runs that put an end to playoff hopes for the Cubs and their fans. The Cubs may have lost the two-game set with the Cardinals, but they did manage to show the sports world that they are sore losers.

Round 2: The Miami Heat became instant playoff contenders in the NBA's eastern conference this week when Shaquille O'Neal rolled into town in a semi-truck. No longer able to put up with half of the spotlight in Los Angeles, Shaq made the move east and promised a world championship would be coming to Miami -- although he didn't say when.

Round 3: Lance Armstrong is on the verge of capturing his sixth Tour de France.

Unless he hits a rock or something, no one will catch him. Having decided against riding in the Olympic Games, you have to wonder what's next for Armstrong. My guess, retirement so he can rest his legs.

MSS beat EMS 41-40 in a nail-biting Over 30 League Basketball Championship at the Falcon Fitness Center July 15.

MSS takes Over 30 crown by edge of seat finish over EMS, 41-40

By Master Sgt. Adam Johnston
18th Wing Public Affairs

A steal, a bucket and a last-second turnover ended the drama of a nail-biting 41-40 finish during the Over 30 intramural league championships at the Falcon Fitness Center July 15 that had the 18th Mission Support Squadron walking away with the championship crown.

According to MSS coach R. B. Robinson, a steal by MSS' Brent Baker with 40 seconds remaining set the stage for a time out that setup MSS' Kevin Gilbert to toss in the championship winning bucket with nine seconds remaining.

While 18th EMS dribbled the length of the floor, a last second turnover sealed the deal for MSS. "That last second turnover was what really killed us," said EMS coach Garcia Johnson said. "Coming in second two years in a row is very heartbreaking...VERY heartbreaking," he said.

"It was an exciting game throughout," said Robinson. "They took a 7-0 lead early with three baskets but we fought back and took the lead at the half 27-22," he said.

The second half of the game was a seesaw struggle as the battle saw 10 different lead changes.

"The upside for us this year was that we took first in regular season play but knowing we had the caliber to beat everybody was the heartbreaking part of losing the championship," said Johnson.

According to Robinson, the championship was the second encounter with 18th EMS in the 2004 intramural playoffs. MSS lost to EMS in regular season action but beat them twice during the playoffs. Robinson said this was no small miracle because three starters for MSS were missing for the championship game. "They were bigger than us and we probably weren't supposed to win but it didn't turnout that way," he said.

MSS finished the Over 30 basketball season with a win-loss record of 8-2, while EMS finished off the season 9-2.

Johnson said his team will go back to the drawing board and see MSS next year. "If they make it that far," he said "because, I know we'll be there."

As for this year's championship win, Robinson said: "I'm not trying to talk any smack, I'm just glad we won. It could have went any way."

Tim Hanks of the 31st Rescue Squadron preps to return the ball at the Risner Fitness Center tennis courts. The winning team at this year's intramural tennis championship was the 18th Services Squadron. In singles championships, Naoki Uchida of 18th SVS defeated Ed Harter, 8-1; Sho Kuwano, 18th SVS defeated Hanks, 8-3 and in doubles-action Hiro Ilima and Yuji Shiroma of 18th SVS defeated Kyoshi Hirakawa and Kiminori Matsumoto of the 718th Civil Engineer Squadron, 8-4. Services dominated the competition as 18th SVS teammate Ken Higa had no matches on the final day.
